The bike racks at NSRC are old, bent and completely inadequate. Needed are racks that will accomodate the newer safer U locks and prevent bikes from falling over and twisting wheels and frames. Now that this building is used for classrooms, there is a serious lack of space and space that doesnt' trash the bikes. I hope you will consider encouraging biking to this building by installing sufficient good quality racks. Thank you!

2. Building #1 - Location
The area we have now on the south side works well. I never use the north side parking, but it's probably good, too. Overall, there is a lot of bike parking here, but the racks are old, rusty, and hard to use.
3. Building #2
Ice Arena
4. Building #2 - Location
Could use a bike parking area on the east side of the front door. There is only a small parking area on the west side and it fills up fast.

6. Building #3 - Location
Additional racks could be placed north of the door on Wright.
7. Building #4

8. Building #4 - Location
The current location of parking is OK, but again, the racks are old, rusty, and a type that's hard to use.

The bike paths need a lot of attention. Many are in places, such as next to sidewalks and close to building entrances, that make it very easy for pedestrians and bus riders to walk or stand on them. Some have bushes growing halfway into the path. The markings on many have faded to almost nonexistence. Many lead illogically to curbs or just end in the middle of a block and continue on the other side of the street or not at all. What most concerns me are the number of people who unwittingly or uncaringly stroll along the bike paths, often 2 or 3 in tandem, sometimes engrossed in phone conversations and totally heedless of bikes whizzing around them. Very clear and obvious signage might help some of them realize where they are.

I love commuting by bicycle. Adequate secure bicycle parking, close to the building I plan to access is also important. thank you for soliciting our input. It's good to know that our suggestions will be considered.

My overall concern is that there are not enough bike racks. I don't have much trouble finding a spot in the winter, but during the normal riding season, the racks are generally at or above capacity.

Working in the receiving department at DCL we have $4 - $5 million dollars of equipment delivered over the course of a year. Bike racks at Newmark are directly across from our dock and some of them need to be removed so semi trucks can utilize that space for backing into our dock. Adding bike racks to DCL and removing the problem racks at Civil Eng would solve two issues at the same time.

I prefer riding on-street in the lane of traffic, particularly since most bike paths end abruptly and do not interconnect (specifically near Uni and Kenney). I do not like bike lanes on street; they cause more confusion and vehicle/bike/pedestrian conflict than just riding in the lane of traffic. A bike path is really only needed for one-way streets in order to travel in the direction opposite of traffic and is best off street. I use Newmark's bike parking which has enough spaces. Pervious concrete for sidewalks and bike parking would be a good idea.

-- Secured bike parking (lockers or indoor), or lighting video surveillance of larger bike parking areas, would be a big help in decreasing bike theft. -- Sheltered bike parking (even if not secure) would help in winter. -- Access to shower / change rooms, a short walk from every academic building, would help bike commuting. -- Please ask campus police to enforce needing front lights on bikes at night. -- Great job replacing the old sidewalk bike paths with on-street bike lanes, please do more; the new bike lanes are great!

DCL and always -- leaving a nice bike outside is a recipe for careless or drunk students to either chip the paint up or stomp on it and bend wheels or frames. I used to follow the rules and leave it outside with my 20-year-old beat up bike, but when I got a new one it comes into my office. Luckily I have a good, safe spot to stick it in.

Speaking as an AP, showers are a bigger issue than parking. There's no shower in DCL, so I can only bike in when it is fairly mild outside. That sucks. At least I can throw my bike on the front of a bus and bus in, then bike home, but even that is troublesome since I travel with a friend and if we both have a bike we fill the rack -- assuming the rack was empty. I'd like to see more parking to eliminate the obnoxious locking locations (or see the Univ. Police/Parking impound said bikes), but lack of the "long term parking" and showers are the thing holding me back from biking more.

*Please* bike racks on the east side of DCL. I work at Uni across the street and every year we have bikes attached to our chain fence. Our students park behind Uni High, and Siebel parking is right across from Uni--so it is DCL students making the sidewalks outside of Uni a mess. I sympathize with them--it's silly to not have bike parking near a door a lot of bikers clearly use!

We should teach people how to properly maintain their bicycles. There are too many people with overly rusted chains and who don't know how to change gears or don't have bikes adjusted to fit their size. Bicycle travel is by far the most convenient form there is on campus.

I have lots of comments about this matter. 1: The existing bike racks in front of the Art & Design building are terrible - not because they are broken and old, but because their design makes it more difficult to lock the front wheel AND the frame to the rack. 2: Take the bike racks around the Beckman Institute as an example of a good bike rack design. 3: Are you REALLY considering spending money on a bike sharing program on campus? It sounds like a nice idea, but look at the "Velib" bike-sharing program in place in Paris: It's expensive to implement, expensive to maintain, and has been abused by vandals, thieves and careless people. 4: Bike lockers: I think the campus might benefit more from coverings over well-designed bike racks. 5: The sidewalk bike lanes (like the one along 4th street): They promote riding on sidewalks (which is illegal) and pose a danger to pedestrians and cyclists alike. Cyclists are not pedestrians and should not be treated as such. I suggest instead that bike lanes be painted on the streets. It's easy, inexpensive, and would be a great use of the extra wide streets on campus. I realize the last comment is less about bike parking than about general bicycle use on campus. Still, if you want to promote bike commuting, painting bike lanes would probably be much more effective and far less expensive solution than implementing a bike-sharing program or buying bike lockers. Good luck.

DCL really needs convenient bike racks near it's east and west doors - the students won't use the ones at Newmark across the street.

Better bike paths would be nice. The one cutting back and forth along Mathews should be re-designed. The sidewalk along First street should not have been striped as a bike path. New bike paths on Goodwin are nice (though I prefer a physical separation with traffic). Bike path down Lincoln would be nice.

Re covered parking, I recommended buildings that represent a spread across campus. I.e., one on N quad, one at Union, the Main Library, one in S quad, and one at Assembly Hall. Would also recommend one for Gerty Drive. Seems reasonable to start with this kind of spread so people from any region on campus can protect their bike during inclement weather without having to walk across campus.

Campus needs more bike racks--even for those buildings that currently have them. For example, it's often hard to find a spot at the UGL or Siebel.

Though you have a "retirees" category for respondents to use to identify themselves, I am not sure how you made sure this survey reached retirees. I only got it because my spouse is an active employee who got it and forwarded it to me.

please please...art design houses some of the most avid bikers (art students!) and needs a serious bike rack makeover. i never kept my bike in these racks because they are rusty and not reliable to chain a good bike to that i cared about. usually i would bring it inside if it was getting dark out, or i would chain it to the wheel chair ramp during the day (a lot of people still do this). we often get pestered by the ad staff to not chain our bikes to the wheel chair ramp obviously because it needs to be comfortable to access with a wheel chair, but bikers need a safe place to chain their bikes, too!

it was very disappointing to see the new ARC opened with bike parking so far from the door. people never sit on the benches that line the interim space; mostly these benches seem to fill the need of holding "no bike parking" signs. funny that a place that is "about exercise" puts biking to and from at such a low priority. hope the space is redesigned someday.

Bike parking is an important priority; however, more pressing concerns include bicycle-specific traffic control indicators, cycling education, comprehensive campus bike-way system. The current infrastructure is hazardous, and campus bike/auto habits compound this problem into being downright dangerous.

Adding bike parking to the west side of ME Lab is critical. Currently, bikes are locked to the ADA handrail, which is not proper.

While I am in favor of bicycles as transportation, I would like to see stronger enforcement of rules of the road on cyclists. When bicyclists try to be one part cyclist and one part pedestrian it is dangerous for everyone. E.G. when bikes ride in the road with cars (which is fine) but then pass cars on the right to go to the front of the line of traffic and then proceed as if they were not a car on sidewalks or when they use crosswalks to ride quickly across major streets such as Lincoln.

Please improve the bike paths on campus. The striping is terrible, and there are many potholes and dangerous joints. The signage is bad as well.

It's important to have good parking for bikes, especially racks that are easy to use and secure. The U racks work well, because you can lock the frame and wheels. Many old racks do not. Also, bikes parked in unsafe (for pedestrians) places and inappropriate places (young trees, building entrances) should be removed or ticketed. Thanks for considering these issues!

There has been an abandoned green Schwinn bike locked up in front of Campbell Hall (on the S side of the building, in front of the Richmond Teaching Studios) for the past 1.5 years. We contacted the Campus Police and requested that it be removed, but it is still there.

22. Please share any additional comments here.
Students need a secure place to keep bikes while in class or doing business on campus. It is unattractive and dangerous to have bikes locked to parking meters, hand rails on stairs, fences, trees, posts and other spots not made for bicycle storage. Additional bike racks near campus buildings would serve bike riders and pedestrians and make campus look neater.

On the north side of Allen Hall/LAR, there is a bike path that deadends into what has become an almost crater or giant mudpit, forcing bicyclists to swerve onto the pedestrian sidewalk to get back to the bike path. I'd love to see it fixed! :)

I had a bike freshman year, but due to the difficulty of maintaining and securing it while in the dorms, I only got another one once I had an apartment. If I had some way to keep my bike weather-protected and accessible while in the dorms, I would have continued to be an avid cyclist my whole time here. As it stands, a fairly new bike had to be completely junked due to damage from snow, rain, and vandals.

Start changing from the ringed bike racks to the loops (the black upside down U shaped racks). Since space is kind of tough to come by in certain areas, you guys should repair racks in some areas because they aren't getting full use.

If buildings are ever partially locked-down (i.e. they have only one door open after hours) then it makes most sense to have bike racks near that entrance.

Replace the wheel loop parking design - bikes fall over. Need more bike parking on Green Street. Would be great to have covered parking (e.g. use existing building overhangs to offer protection to bikes, bike parking in parking garages).

There is some inconsistency from the university. Administrators at our building threatened to remove illegally parked bikes, without considering the severe limitations to parking in the bike racks and the fact that they are nearly always filled to capacity. The university should encourage biking AND provide sufficient storage facilities.

Although I would pay for a bike locker, what I really wish for is free public bicycle parking that is under a roof. I bike to work every day regardless of weather, and there is not space for me to bring my bicycle into my building (IGB). I don't mind riding in the rain, but I hate leaving my bike to sit out in the rain all day.

Most buildings have adequate bike racks, but the real issue is the interaction between cars and bikes as well as pedestrians and bikes. It seems both are frustrated with bikers. I feel that pedestrians should not walk in bike lanes and bikers should not ride on sidewalks. Increasing the number of bike paths and regulation of these would definitely help in biker/pedestrian safety. Also, cars should just not be permitted on campus. There are too many pedestrians and bikers and not enough parking spaces.

Thanks for conducting this survey!! (it would also be great if there were ads directed to on-campus pedestrians to use the side walks and NOT the bike lanes!) cyclists need to know not to go in the opposite direction of traffic in the street bike lanes.

I put down the south side of Everitt as needing improvement because the bike racks are half-heartedly blocked off right now because of supposed danger from falling glass. Valid, but it'd be nice to get that issue addressed since it's been a couple months now.

I like the idea of bike lockers. However, I am skeptical about another fee being added to an already mounting list of them. Assuming that this was based on actually renting a space (and not merely charged to everyone), I think it's a great idea.

Aside from bike parking, some of the bike paths around campus could use an upgrade. In particular, the bike path that parallels Pennsylvania Ave on the south end of campus has multiple spots where the concrete is crumbling; some other bike paths are in a similar situation.

Also, making the bike paths more conspicuous and clear may help prevent students from walking on the bike paths and thus minimize collisions between cyclists and pedestrians.

I don't like it when people bring their bikes into the building. I understand why they do it though. I would bike to work more often if there was covered bike parking, either through lockers or just bike racks with roofs over them to keep off the rain, snow, etc. I think this would also help prevent people from bringing their bikes indoors.

Although I noted that the law building needs additional rack space, just a few more racks would do it - maybe four more. One of the keep areas where improvements could be made in the realm of bike parking is to update how frequently abandoned bikes are removed from bikes racks. Every few months, just send someone around to place notes on all bikes that appear to be abandoned (rusty chain, flat tires, damaged or broken bikes, leaves collected around the tires, etc...). Then send a notice to the entire college community that a bike collection is about to be made and that they should check their bike and remove these notes if they do not intend to abandon a bike. A week or two later, go out again and remove all bikes with the notes still affixed. Collected bikes could be given away or refurbished and sold at low cost. Distributing more information on registering bikes would also probably be helpful.

The bike paths on campus are in terrible shape e.g. the paths from Lincoln Ave running across the north side of Allen Hall and on past Bevier. The path along Mathews parallel to the quad is not good either - bad conflicts with traffic and with people at the parking meters The path along the north side of Green Street is absurd - you risk running into either pedestrians or getting hit by buses.

Having covered areas to keep bikes would be great. My bike is in bad shape after the winter, and I was disappointed I had nowhere to put it to avoid the damage. Part of this is my apartment building's fault, but having storage somewhere on campus or a covered rack would be great.

Pedestrians should be more respectful of specifically bike-designated paths. They should also walk in two lanes on the sidewalk. The sidewalks are that wide so that people can walk in two directions (or so people/bikes can pass from behind) yet people walk 3,4, even 5 abreast taking up the whole sidewalk, totally oblivious to the fact that there are people behind them who might want to get around.

Bicycles brought into buildings due to the lack of convenience and secure racks/parking is a major issue in our Chemistry buildings. The fire depts. and other safety organizations consider bikes stored in corridors or passage ways a major obstacle during emergency egress situations (chem. spill, fire, power outages, etc.). BIKES ARE GREAT! But, we need to provide the infrastructure (racks, storage, policies, etc.) to ensure they are managed in accordance with other campus policies. Thanks for the great work you're doing. -Derek R. Fultz

I know this survey is about parking but I need to say that it does not feel like the campus supports bike use: the bike path system is horrible! (damaged paths, hole, dangerous interfaces with pedestrians, etc). I have been riding here for 14 years and seen only very, very minimal maintainance much less improvement.

I am amazed that you don't even ask about the bike paths on campus. They have been allowed to deteriorate to terrible condition in some places. There really needs to be either a commitment to having bike paths or just remove the paint and forget about it. A barely there bike path is more dangerous than none at all.

The bike paths on campus are in serious need of repair. There are very large cracks and bumps in the pavement that can easily damage a bike's wheel - these paths need to be maintained properly to encourage bikes on campus. Travel the east-west path from Greg Hall to Lincoln Ave (on a bike) and you'll understand.

1. It seems like bike parking is an afterthought for new buildings - all the new south campus buildings put in minimal parking which is often full. 2. Bike paths on campus are often blocked by maintenance vehicles and during construction, no thought is put into detour routes.

The Bike Project

The bike rack at the Psychology building (across the street from Kam's) is old. The rack is now a giant metal rod. We can't lock our bikes on it because there's no way to prevent someone from sliding the lock and bike off the rack. Install racks similar to the ARC's blue bike racks.

Bike parking is usually full near NCSA and Siebel. I avoid parking at the rack on the west side of Siebel because the hoops are too close to the wall, and because the relative privacy and accessibility of the location may attract vandalism. The overflow-parking from NCSA usually goes to bike parking area on the west side parking structure, but it seems like that parking area could easily be covered. Also, there are a number of attractive fences to which one could lock a bike on the way to the overflow-area, and the area under stairwell in the parking structure is also an ideal place to lock a bike. So, the overflow doesn't work as well as it might. Lastly, one of the my top reasons for bicycling to campus (beyond the way it helps with my personal health and environmental concerns) is that I can park right outside the door to my building -- the minutes I save by avoiding the walk from a car-parking spot means that bike-commuting is actually faster than car-commuting for me. So, bike-parking is critical. P.S. My wife works in the psychology building. She tried biking and didn't continue for many reasons, but one of them was that it took her about 15 minutes to figure out how to lock her bike to the ancient bike-racks outside of the building. Fortunately, the bus service in town is very good, so that provides a nice alternative to driving alone.

Seriously, just adding rows of U-shaped bike racks under the overhangs of the FLB would be the best thing EVER and it would be cheap too! Bike parking is okay at many campus locations, but COVERED bike parking is nonexistent and that cuts down the number of days per year I can bike.

There is a extremely high need to have the curbs and sidewalks repainted with bright reflective paint on wright street along the bike lane. Students step off the sidewalk and into the bike lane every 30 seconds and dont look both ways. I am constantly swerving to try to avoid these guys that arent paying attention, I am not a reckless biker I see many close calls with other bikers too. Please make this bike lane more noticeable, or relay this onto someone who can. Thanks

One thing that I think is important for bike parking is that there's a way to determine and remove abandoned bicycles. In a lot of parking areas I go to, I see many bikes in the same exact spot week after week, often missing seats, tires, etc. There should be a way to have those removed and stored somewhere other than in parking spaces which other students and faculty need.

I wish that all of these resources for bikes and bicyclists were more publicized, especially to freshman and incoming students! I didn't even know we had all these bike shops and bike list serves. When I first came to school, I was so unsure of whether I should bring my bike or not. Now I would never think of coming here without it! I wish someone had told me beforehand though how many bike paths and how bike parking is available on campus. I wish I had known how bike-friendly the campus is.

The Psychology building desperately needs a new bike rack. Many students take classes here and many faculty ride their bikes, but the current bike rack is a piece of junk so people chain their bikes to parking meters and the building railings.

I appreciate all the paths on campus. As for parking it is easy to see where it is lacking - just look for bikes that are tied to railings and trees. Also, bike stands need shelter! Getting in a car that has been rained on is fine, getting on a bike that is rained on is very wet, uncomfortable, and bad for the bike. Putting up covers is much cheaper than parking garages for cars!

I work at Grainger Engineering Library. The nearest bike rack is on the east side and many people aren't aware that it's there. Often bikes are chained to our stair rails, our statue on the s. side, and left leaning against the pillars. We really need bike racks, closer.

Begin on campus by replacing all the old low bar and ring racks, such as those on the SE and SW corners of the Illini Union. Also the Ag quad area surrounded by Mumford, ASL, ERML, Turner Hall and the ACES Library is totally underserved with bike parking. The few spaces east of Mumford Hall were lost to construction and now there is basically no bike parking for those buildings.

I actually just want to mention that although there is ample bike parking around these two buildings, bicycle users generally lock their bikes inappropriately to chain fenced that are not meant for bike parking. Additionally the bikers on the quad and on the campus in general do not use any rules of the road or etiquette when approaching pedestrian areas. I would love to see some education for bikers on how to approach a pedestrian from behind safely. "passing on your left", etc. Some kind of warning when they come up quickly (and silently) from either side when one is walking on what used to be a peaceful walk on campus would be so appreciated.

Bikers do not seem to be aware of or are too lazy to park their bikes in the racks between Illini Hall and the Student Services building and Illin Hall. I see people parking locking their bikes to the parking meters along John St., or worse, to the hand rail on the steps into the building. The latter blocks traffic coming in and out of the building specially in the 10 minutes in between classes when students and faculty are coming in/out of the building

It would be fantastic if a better bike rack was installed outside the Psychology Building. The current bike racks are mostly a single rod. I think there had been circle rods to secure bike tires to, but a lot of those are gone. Bikes are rarely secured on the current racks and when they are, the bikes fall down. That is probably why bikes are chained to everything else around the building, mostly the hand rails of the outer steps. This leads to a dangerous situation. We have daily visitors participating in numerous research labs. Our visitors range from parents with small children as well as the elderly and visually/hearing impaired individuals. There have been times when it has been impossible to use the hand rails while using the outer steps of the building (3 sets of public steps; 1 set steps in back at loading dock). Thank you for taking this into consideration. Terry L. Davis Office Administrator for Department Head Department of Psychology

i have found a lack of bike racks around campus, and it's very frustrating. also, the bike paths MUST be maintained better! if you want students to support a sustainable environment, then you should provide the means and opportunity to do so.

One or two bike racks will not be enough to accomodate cyclists. There needs to be at least four bike racks at each location. These racks can even break from traditional aesthetic and can be used in a more visually appealing way. Think modern design of bike racks.

Unlock the gate enclosing the bike racks at BIF! There are quite a few racks there that would help significantly for parking bikes since there are only a few other bike racks around the whole building. However, since they're locked, none of the students can use them. This is stupid! Why spend the money to build it (money we pay) if you won't let us use it?

I would REALLY like to see more bike lanes on the roads around campus -- because they are so few and far between now, pedestrians ignore the lanes and step into them regularly without looking, and cars don't know how to deal with them. PLEASE add more bike lanes!!!

My concerns are not with parking my bike, but with the lanes themselves. Many of the bike lanes on campus are illogical, i.e. how the bike lane changes sides of the street in the middle of Mathews or the bike lane on Springfield behind the library just disappears instead of continuing on Springfield. Many of the lanes are no longer visibly painted, i.e. on Armory in front of the Main library or around Virginia and Pennsylvania. Also, the bike lane from the gym leading to Pennsylvania is deteriorating and is a rough ride.

The bike path that runs down Armory and then turns and goes down Wright street is dangerous, especially outside north exit of the Main Library. The bus stop is right on the bike path. During high commuting times the people getting on and off the bus block the road for the cyclists, which makes it both inconvenient and potentially dangerous as cyclists may collide with pedestrians. I have seen this happen before and have actually been apart of one. If you could somehow fix this (maybe by making a detour or by moving the bus stop to the other side of the street) then that would be a great improvement towards our bike paths. Thank you very much for your time!

There is another bike service that is not on your list, offered by "Brent" on the corner of Main and Gregory. He's good, but kind of a jerk. Bruce is also good, but moody. Durst is good, but capitalist pigs who swindle to make some extra cash. This is why I go the Bike Project. I love that place!

Covered parking all over campus is a big issue. Also the old style racks with the long pipes and circular metal pieces are useless if you have a U-lock (as recommended over cable locks by everyone) and you also have quick-release wheels. It is impossible to lock your wheel and frame to the rack. These should all be updated to the new sine-wave racks or the old school ones with slats (or the downtown-style Us).

I am extremely happy to see increased attention being paid to bike facilities on campus. The bike lane situation on campus needs much more work as well, as many bike lanes are poorly maintained or are dangerously situated with respect to car traffic and pedestrians.

The survey does not address actual bicycle use. For example, the university is not maintaining its current bicycle path system which is very sad. The old bicycle path system was very well planned and a model for other campuses. The cost of maintaining the old excellent system is minimal in comparison to allowing its continued decay or designing and building a new system. Even the old bicycle parking lots are better and more efficient than the new lots that have fewer spaces and cause problems with users locking bikes to each other instead of providing for safe individual places to park a bike. Very poor survey with no specific questions that deal directly or specifically with bicycling on campus, in my opinion.

As a year-round bike rider I really appreciate that you are working on improving bike facilities on campus. My impression is that this is very underserved at present, given how many bike riders there are and how much cheaper and more environmentally friendly it is to support bikes. I hoped that you will be addressing the poor bike lane situation on campus as well as the poor or non-existing bike path connections into the surrounding communities soon.

the bicycle paths are often quite bad and, I would think, a higher priority than parking: there are obstacles, hedges, some end at right angles, some end before they reach bicycle parking (for instance, the Union), one can't take a bike path from the east side of campus the quad, etc., south of campus the path swerves across the road and other oddities abound. thanks for starting the conversation in this way--I know people have been meeting and all but surveys are nice to see

Many bike paths on campus are in poor shape. The one along the north side of the new genome bldg should have been replaced after the building was completed; indeed, that whole area needs a redesign, since motorized vehicles are constantly being driven in and out of that area, endangering both pedestrians and bicyclists, chewing up the grass (the signs against vehicles on the grass are ludicrous), and further damaging the pavement on the bike lanes. A vehicle lane is needed, one ending in a place to to a turn-around, and it needs to be kept separate from both pedestrian and bike paths. The bike path that runs E-W past CIRCE (or whatever it is now called) is in poor condition; it needs to be replaced. Moreover, it ends at Lincoln Avenue, but there is no ramp at its end to allow bicyclists to enter Lincoln. Perhaps it should be rerouted to end at a dedicated bicycle crossing. The path that runs along the north side of the English bldg is a disaster. The old path that was there at least was designed to keep pedestrians off the path; in its current incarnation, pedestrians do not distinguish it from the walkway of which it is in fact an integral part. The path that runs N-S along Wright St, in the area just south of Green, is in very poor shape and needs repaving. I could go on; the whole system of bike paths needs maintenance and redesign the better to separate bicyclists and pedestrians (and in some cases, motorized vehicles).

The locational and building information at the beginning of the survey is not well done, I wonder how many stopped there? I'm not sure how you will use information of Gregory Hall North side. We need more racks pretty much everywhere. We need shaded and permeable surface areas for our bike. They do not all need concrete pads they do not need to be roofed over. They do not all need to be giant U's, we just need safe, efficient and accessible racks.

Figuring out a way to reduce the cost of parking for employees who agree to bike or take public transportation on a regular basis would be very helpful. If you have to pay full price for parking you may as well use it but if you had an economic incentive to reduce your parking expense by only driving occasionally that would be a big incentive.

I currently do not own a bicycle. I live in far north east Urbana. If a safe bike route existed between there and campus, and adequate/secure bike parking was available I would definitely consider biking to work.

Campus bike paths need improvement, such as hatching to indicate where pedestrian paths cross bike paths. Also, we need to enforce pedestrians not walking in bike lanes.

Put covered bike racks on campus. You could have done this with ARC, Grainger library, Seitz MRL, Seibel Center, and many other buildings on campus. The University says don't take bikes into buildings, but I'm not going to just leave it out to get rusty. You could put a small roof over MEB, MEL, MSEB, and Everett Labs easily.

Baker's Bikes is by far the best shop there. Bikeworks has a mean person running everything. Durst broke my bike and then put the blame on me. The bike project is cool, but I have an older bike that most others don't know how to tune correctly.

It would be nice if they put signs near some railings saying bike locks will be cut...I feel that would help educate people that it is unacceptable to lock bikes to railings.

22. Please share any additional comments here.

Please treat bicycles as a primary mode of transport. Too often bike racks are hidden away, tucked into inconvenient locations, or clearly tacked on as an afterthought. There should be no hesitation in locating bike racks near main entries or directly in front of buildings. Bike racks are not eyesores nor do they ruin the aesthetic appeal of a building, so they should be prominent and of large capacity.

Biking is an incredibly efficient way to get around campus quickly. The better the facilities for bike riders (bike racks or covered spots the), the more riders there will most likely be and the 'greener' the university will become.

Campus maps showing bike routes would probably go a long way in making bike traffic more orderly. It's hard to figure out how the bike paths connect, and that's why people often ride on pedestrian paths. Also, the bike path that goes straight through a bus stop on Wright and Armory next to the library is problematic. It is a sure set up for pedestrian-cyclist crashes.

If there were more secure dry places to leave a good bicycle, I would bring one from home to leave on campus(preferred), rather than leaving a clunker locked outside Krannert Performing Arts Centers on Oregon 24/7. I tried leaving a bike chained to a steel post inside the garage overnight and the tires were slashed overnight.

Please, please, please, get some more bike racks for the IUB. And don't put them on the east side of the building, where there's always a herd of kids waiting for the buses. The Illini Union could use some more bike racks - the ones there are always close to capacity. GSLIS could use a better bike solution, too. The racks on the east side are surrounded by a curb that makes it hard to position the bike, and the other racks - on the south side of the building - are kind of tucked away where it's not easy to see. It's a bike thief's or mugger's dream come true.

This survey and previous bike path surveys are nice, but I'd like to see more encouragement for bike riding for campus personnel. We're making so much effort to reduce traffic on campus, but there's still a battle for parking every day within a mile of campus. Without some type of secured / monitored parking location then it's still worth driving to save me 50 minutes on the MTD each day.

Since the construction in front of the Library on Armory, the rebuilt bike paths are not marked as bike paths. That increases the number of pedestrians who unwittingly walk on the bike path, which is already a major problem. This requires simple painting, not a big deal to do, but a big deal for safety. Please fix this obvious oversight. More largely, that area is death alley, as the bike path runs right through the place where people get on the bus, get off the bus, and stand and wait for the bus. It badly needs a complete redesign. Pending a redesign, it needs signs to remind people getting on and off the bus to watch for bikes, signs to remind bikers to watch for people getting on or off the bus, and signs to tell people not to stand on the bike path while waiting for the bus. That sounds like a lot but doesn't have to be and doesn't present such a big design challenge. This is (and has long been) a major injury or death--and lawsuit--waiting to happen. I have complained about it to the campus police and received no response. I've been riding through this death trap for over 25 years and have seen many near accidents. How many actual accidents there may have been, I have no way of knowing. Fix it. Thanks for listening.

As a biker, the main frustration on campus is bike paths that are either non-existent, or that disappear in odd places. In some way that makes it even more dangerous for cyclists. Please install bike racks at the Art & Design building. They will not only service the art school, but the Krannert Art Museum as well. There are a high volume of students that take courses in Room 62 Krannert and have no where to park their bicycles. They chain them to the fence north of the building which destroys the fence and other property.

I would really like to see better signs on campus for cars and pedestrians to be aware of bike lanes. In particular, the bike lane crossing by Smith Music Hall and the Foreign Language Building on Mathews. I have seen several very serious car accidents where the bicyclist was injured, because cars/bikers do not know they are cross a lane of traffic. Because of parked cars, you can't see bikers when you turn right into the cul-de-sac. I've been in several bike accidents myself with pedestrians who walk into a bike lane unexpectedly. In almost every case, I have been the one who was injured from swerving to avoid them. Also, can you ask the campus tour people to not walk their tours in the bike lane?

I no longer ride my bicycle due to knee problems. The problem with Illini Hall is that bicyclists often chain their bicycles to the railing at the south entrance, partially blocking the entrance walkway. There is adequate parking behind the building. Bicyclists chain illegally because it is closer, there is no warning sign indicating that they shouldn't, and there is no enforcement of the prohibition. There is no place to provide closer bicycle parking without tremendous expense (unless it is put on the city sidewalk) so the only ways to lessen the hazardous chaining of bicycles to the railing are signage, enforcement, and guerilla action action such bicycles. Enforcement of regulations for bicycle parking and usage would be much more effective than information sessions that are not attended by violators.

DCL. Bring it in once a month. I would love to have a locker but it would be better to have inside space - for free. I will not pay for bike parking - I can't afford it! The university hasn't given me enough to keep up with inflation for ten years (maybe longer) so my income is going down. It seems to me I should be PAID for riding my bike to campus. After all I save the University a lot of money by not needing subsidized* car parking. *Based on my understanding that a space in a parking structure costs more per year than the U charge for them. If this is true why would bicyclist be asked to pay for better parking? That is not a way to encourage MORE people to bike to campus.

I think a bigger problem is the issue that bikes are parked everywhere and not in the designated spots. More appropriate places for them so they aren't on every side rail (on steps) would be a tremendous improvement.

I do not drive to work, and either ride my bike or take the MTD on days when weather is not favorable for riding. I use my bike as others would use their car, for errands and basic transportation. A significant number of bike racks will not work with bikes. The kind that require the tire to be inserted are not adequate because of the size of tires, racks, and the absence of a kick stand. Thank you for the survey and the improvements that are being made for bikes and biking.

You don't need a survey to figure out where bike racks are needed. Just look at any building and see where bikes are chained to trees, posts, etc. Also I am disappointed that the majority of bike racks on campus are not in plain view of the buildings; they're always "tucked away" from sight, as if they were some eye-sore. If you want people to start riding bikes on campus, it doesn't help that people have to chain their bikes to trees and have to go out of their way to find a bike rack. Any rack you should see that only holds a bike wheel you should immediately scrap. People don't use them. They're not safe. Wheels bend on them.

the inverted U bike racks are good, but the low bars with double circles are terrible to lock your bike to, it makes it difficult to have: 1. your bike stable (and up), 2. to use a u-lock, 3. to lock both front and back wheels.

Campus policy currently does not allow bikes to be brought inside buildings. This needs to be changed for several reasons. First, it isn't enforced (in every building on campus you can see bikes inside). Second, bikes are more secure inside. Third, if the bike is stored properly inside (in a closet, behind a door, etc.), it isn't a hazard and should be allowed.
